Of the new program of vaudeville that comes to the Pavilion today, J. Aldrich Libby and Katherine Trayer will present the feature act. Both members of this act have been for many years noted members of the theatrical profession, especially Mr. Libby, who was at one time soloist with the famous Boston Symphony orchestra. He also made famous Charles K. Harris' great ballad, entitled "After the Ball." Many who own a photograph undoubtedly have records made by Mr. Libby, as he was one of the principle soloists with the Edison Phonograph company for several years prior to his entering the vaudeville field. Since entering vaudeville he has met with great success, being featured on all the programs of the theatres of the larger cities. The act Mr. Libby and Miss Trayer present is one that is built to show their remarkable singing powers, which they have used entirely since entering the vaudeville field. As a musical and comedy treat, the patrons of the Pavilion will no doubt thoroughly enjoy the act. All the pictures are excellent, one being a stirring war drama, which is one mass of rapid, exciting action from start to finish.

Many of our customers have said: "I should like one of your couch hammocks, but cannot afford it." Saturday we offer them to you at $7.49 each. Just think it over and place your order early Saturday morning at C. N. Kenyon & Co.'s store.

Out of courtesy to the Clan Gordon, who are holding their annual picnic at Caledonia park Saturday, the Barre A. C. have arranged a game away from home on that date. To-morrow morning the Barre club will leave for Berlin, N. H., where they play the Berlin A. C. to-morrow afternoon. The Berlin team has made an enviable record this year and has met defeat but seldom. In the Berlin line-up are several stars well known in New Hampshire baseball. On Saturday the Barre team will journey to Colebrook, N. H., and face the independent club of that place. The Colebrook team is composed of college stars. Manager Hoffman is to use Davidson in one game and he will send Johnson to the breast-works for the other. He is undecided in which games the pitchers will be worked.

SOUTH BARRE.

Sunday School Enjoyed a Picnic at Williamstown Yesterday.

The South Barre Sunday school enjoyed a picnic at Williamstown yesterday, about seventy children and their parents and friends being conveyed to the picnic grounds by automobiles. A short program was given, consisting of singing by the children and a reading by the secretary of the school. Games and races were participated in by the children and enjoyed by all and refreshments of ice cream and cake were served. Those who enjoyed the hospitality wish to thank the gentlemen who conveyed the party to and from the grounds in automobiles—D. C. Howard, Dr. Scribner, Mr. Worcester and Mr. Nye. It was the verdict of all that a most enjoyable day had been spent.

HIS OPPORTUNITY

By ANDREW C. EWING

When I was a young man—that's more than fifty years ago now—I concluded to go south. I had a romantic idea of plantation life and thought I should like to be one of the southern fire eaters of that period.

I found the planters more peaceable than I had expected, at least the best of them, though when they did fight they fought to kill. Those who had come of good stock, fathers of families, had no bloodthirstiness whatever. But there were a number of ugly men in the south, who always went about armed and of whom every one was more or less afraid.

Notwithstanding that shooting was rare I found when I got where it existed that I didn't like it so well as I had thought I would. Indeed, no one took me for a shooter. I was small and youthful looking. The long limbed sons of the south did not seem to consider me of much importance. The only person who fancied me was the planter's daughter, a girl about my own age. She had a number of admirers among those gentlemen, but she said they didn't know anything except about horses, and that wouldn't suit her at all. I could write verses to her, and, having a fine tenor voice and she a guitar, I could sing love songs to her accompaniment.

Her father, Randolph Hunter, had no idea that a love affair was in progress between me and his daughter until it had gone so far that it was scarcely controllable. Then when he found it out he said to me:

"Permit me to remark, sub, that you attend to my daughter must stop at once. If I ever catch you communicating with her in any way whatever I shall give you fifty lashes, the same as I would give one of my servants. Hea' is a check for your salary, sub, made out to the end of the year."

According to my ideas before coming to the country, I should have thrown the check in his face and shot him dead. Instead, I put the check in my pocket, bade him good morning and took my departure. But I did not—I could not—leave the country where I dwelt my love. I secured a position as tutor in the home of another planter, who had no daughter of a marriageable age.

One day soon after this I heard that Mr. Hunter had had a difficulty with a slave dealer. The trader had offered to buy a slave husband without his wife. Hunter had replied that he never parted families. The trader after this information offered him a specially high price for the man, whereupon Mr. Hunter broke his cane over the man's head. Neither of them was armed, and the affair at the time went no further, though a feeling seemed to exist that there would be and very soon.

Before going south I had bought a revolver, expecting to have many franchises with it. Though the southerners seemed to consider me too delicate—perhaps insignificant better—expresses it to have any trouble with, I didn't think it prudent to part with my weapon. I carried it at my hip under my coat, where it would not be seen, as the southerners did. One day I had occasion for its use, but not as I had intended.

Taking an afternoon horseback ride, I suddenly heard shots, that seemed to come from a point just ahead of me and around a turn in the road. My first inclination was to turn about to escape stray bullets, but this was so little in keeping with my previous chivalrous ideas that I kept on and, turning the bend, saw Mr. Hunter and another man, both on horseback, pumping lead at each other from revolvers.

But they were too far apart to do much damage. Mr. Hunter was nearest to me. A moment after I came in sight of him he threw his revolver in the road. I inferred he had emptied it. A moment later his opponent drew a second weapon and rode forward.

Spurring my horse beside Mr. Hunter, I handed him my revolver. The matter being one of life and death to him, he paid no attention to me, but clutched my pistol. His opponent, who had now come very near, fired a shot at him and missed him. Hunter returned it with no better effect. Then the two pistols exploded at once. Hunter's opponent fell off his horse in the road and died in a few minutes. Hunter's left arm was shattered.

For a few moments the conditions were singular. A man lay dead in the road. His slayer contemplated him momentarily then turned and looked at me.

"Well, sub," he said, "I suppose I am indebted to you for my life."

"I am pleased to have saved it for your family," I replied.

He turned again to his enemy.

"Who was he?" I asked.

"A nigger trader, sub."

When we parted Mr. Hunter asked me to call upon him during the evening. I met my love on the veranda, and she jumped for me, throwing her arms around my neck. I found her father within, his arm in a sling.

"I presume, sub," he said, "that if you hadn't handed me that weapon I should not be here to forbid your marriage with my daughter. Therefore I'm consider'd out of the game."

"No, sir," I responded, "I will marry no man's daughter without his consent."

He reached out his hand, grasped mine and said, with the same formality, with no show of emotion: "You have it, sub."
